

The Jay Fein Scholarship honors a leader in the atmospheric sciences whose calm presence, scientific insights, perseverance, and diplomatic and administrative skills helped to advance meteorological and climate science and infrastructure for more than 40 years. During his tenure as a program director at the National Science Foundation, Jay Fein exercised excellent judgment in deciding whether to support high risk projects with great potential for impact on the field and worked tirelessly, both nationally and internationally, to promote, support and advance the science. Throughout his career, Jay advised, encouraged and mentored scientists of all ages. The scholarship carries a $5000 stipend.
